right into the carrying baskets of the arriving sellers with little ceremony and takes as much as he can with one or two hands. 443 651

Toll is levied at the approaches to the market. Here and there is a toll hut where the people passing must pay their contribution. These receipts belong to the king in whose kingdom the market is located. These market tolls often form very good sources of income for the royal families, as the markets are held regularly and are well attended. In return for the market tolls the king must maintain the market halls (if there are any).

[709] b) Market Coercion. There is no actual market coercion. But nothing can be bought outside of the market, since the Khasi do not have any stores. Only in the larger villages are there one or two shops, which, however, do not count. These shops must all pay the "market toll" for all the articles which they sell at home with the exception of the sale of kiad, "rice liquor," which is never sold at the market.

c) Prices and Measures. The prices are based on supply and demand. They are freely determined by the sellers. It is not the custom to bargain and haggle. An exception is the price for the daily rice, which often causes quarrels. The sellers sit by their wares without shouting or praising. The visitors come to the market, look at the wares, touch them, weigh them in their hands, and finally ask about the price. 437

If the prices seems to them to be too high, they put the wares back in their places and go their way without making any remarks.

Coins are used for paying. The Khasi have the following names for the English-Indian money? 436 children, but Christian influence has eradicated or driven underground the consumption by women and children. Industrial arts. The only industrial arts traditionally practiced in all households were a rudimentary carpentry and a simple utilitarian basketry. Other arts were few, and were practiced as village specialties: the washing and smelting of iron ore and the forging of hoes, daos, knives, swords, and cooking pots (upland Khasis); the spinning of cotton thread (Mynso village, Jaintia); the dyeing of cotton thread and the weaving of cloth (Jaintias, Bhois, Lyngngams, Wars); the spinning and weaving of Eri silk (Khyrwang and Nongtung villages, Bhoi and Jaintia); and the hand manufacture, without wheel, of painted earthenware pots (Larnai village, Jaintia). Ironworking and the production of cotton goods have nearly died out through the competition of machine-made goods. Carpentry has greatly improved. An innovation of major importance is the sewing and tailoring, on sewing machines, of ready-made garments for both sexes. [Cf. Darrah 1896; C., W. 1832.] Trade. Khasi villages normally contain a number of household shops operated by women. Every Khasi also lives within walking distance of several village markets that are held on successive days of the eight-day week. The limits of market intercourse for the members of any particular village can be roughly distinguished by their naming the days of their week, which are called after the active markets. The exception is the huge market at Shillong, much of which is active daily, and which serves as a magnet for Khasis from all over the hills. The traditional barter has given way to currency in all markets. The small ones contain at least some local farm produce, plus other essentials like betel nut, and the food and tea stalls which serve as centers of social intercourse. The big markets contain not only regional produce and manufactures but also products from distant parts of the hills, brought for sale by traveling middlemen. There is also substantial trade, from the hills to the valleys, in potatoes, pears, hides, lac, cotton, caoutchouc, the wood of the sal tree, Eri silk thread, limestone, coal, ivory, bay leaf, betel nut, pan leaves, bananas, sugar cane, oranges, til, turmeric, and chilies. From the plains to the hills, there is trade in dried fish, paddy rice, salt, cooking oil, kerosene, matches, tea, sugar, wheat flour, machine-made cloth, shoes, metal pots, crockery, porcelain objects, coral beads, silver, and gold. Markets are important not only as economic institutions but also as centers for recreation (including archery competitions), courtship, reaffirmation of kinship ties with distant relatives, and the dissemination of information of all kinds. [Cf. Stegmiller 1924a.] Division of labor. Men do the heavy work, such as clearing and burning the swidden fields, caring for cattle and goats and driving them to market, butchering and selling large cuts of beef and pork, carpentry and mining, and driving and laboring on motor vehicles. They also tailor men's

276
177
335
285
184
[283]
[386]
[286]
[323]
177
178
[326]
[296]
[333]
[294]
443
444
[805]
[437]
[178]
[443]
[438]
[441]
[526]
[583]
[602]
[203]
462
[241]
[231]
[443]
[335]
[316]
[493]
000